HYMN TO LAKE ERIE. Child of the Ocean. Maid of the Deep, Thy beauty I worship, Thy grandeur adore.

Thy depths not unfathomed Thy vastness unknown As thy Mother, the Ocean But the splash of thy waters, Thy waves as they swell, Revealeth thy lineage, Thy parentage tell. O'erspread with a mist At the day's early dawn, All night thou hast slumber This coverlet drawn O'er thy bosom; and hid From the stranger on land

Thy vastness and grandeur,

The work of God's hand.

But soon in the East

A glimmering light Foretells of the sun-rise O, glorious sight, The faint color deepen To yellow and gold, Then blazes like fire With glories untold. And soon through the treetops, On valley and plane, And then on thy bosom

Descends like the rain, The sunlight of Heaven, Dispelling the mist, And sparkles on dewdrops Thy blue waters kiss. At evening I venture Ups thy broad breast, Whicheaves all the night-time All do does not rest. The stat in the West Grows weary and laves As if in thy waters

His hot cheeks to bathe Behind in the distance, The bluffs of the shore Mark where thy billows Continually roar And now they reflect Such varying bues
As the pen of the artist
Never subdues. But soon they will fade; Already is left But outlines and blackness

Of night gathers on. The light-house's illumined, And gloom is withdrawn. In spite of thy beauty, Thy geandeur and might, O, Sea! thou art cruel And treacherous by night. For oft has the boatman, In darkness and gloom, On rocks thou wert hiding Been dashed to his doom. Still thon art enchanting; I love thy cold smile,

And now as the darkness

Of beauty bereft.

Its victims beguile. -E. G. RANDAL. Oberlin, June 20, 1887. SAN FRANCISCO PEAK.
